COMMUNICATION INFRASTRUCTURE HIGHLIGHTS

- The Chase Tower's strategic location close to the border and central location in the Lower Rio Grande Valley was the primary factor for it becoming the key interconnection point in South Texas and Northern Mexico. A secondary factor was the large population in the region. Analyzing the demographics of just the communities on the United States of America (US) side of the border is a mistake.
- This population base alone supports the need for a key interconnection facility. The Chase Tower's role as an international interconnect adds to its importance.
- The McAllen and Laredo border became the major inter-exchange for international traffic.
- For all types of content service providers (CSPs) and content delivery networks (CDNs), the high-density ecosystem of both US and Mexico networks located at the Chase Tower is an extremely viable option to reach the majority of users in Mexico without the regulatory hassle and costly implementation of establishing their own infrastructure inside their respective nations. For Internet Service Providers (ISPs), CSP's, CDNs, hyperscalers, and cloud providers interconnecting at the border is the smartest method to access Mexico.
- The Chase Tower facility enables this architecture and is the most convenient location in the Valley to access a high capacity ecosystem with access to large population centers in both sides of the border. Thanks to its location, the building serves as a gateway to the telecommunications market both in the US and Mexico, and has been connecting global networks for more than 20 years.
