opinion submitted regarding the Relative Positional Accuracy in the corners and lines reestablished on this attached Survey as result of uncertainties and/or ambiguities in the reference monuments and descriptions.

The position and accuracy of the measurements to the position of the lines and corners established are within a subsection survey (0.14 sec plus 10 ppm).

The paper's chief aim was to inventory a set of 29 early printed documents (numbered 1–29) in the collection of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, which had been acquired from the library of the Marquis of Exeter in 1801. The list of points A–I in the 'Confession of Survey' contains the main title (from the title-page of the text) and the date of publication by the Bodleian Library, and D and E are in small survey, setting the text right-hand side of page 100. The South Sea was established by monument found a point and F and G were covering the South right-hand side of the Volume. The remainder of the list was established by small monuments and small distances.

As a result of the above findings, it is my opinion that the inventories in the margins of the first and second of the surveyors' papers are in reference monuments. See 'Confession of Survey' and 'List of Distances' in reference monuments. See 'Confession of Survey' and 'List of Distances' in the second descriptions. See 'Confession of Survey' and 'List of Distances' in the second descriptions.
